How long does it take to clear customs?

When shipping internationally, the time it takes to clear customs can vary widely--from just a few hours to over a week. Understanding the typical customs clearance timeline helps you prepare for possible customs delays and ensure your cargo arrives on schedule. The time required for customs clearance depends heavily on how your goods are shipped:

Why does customs clearance take so long?

If you are importing products that are food or drug related, customs clearance will take longer. Customs will sometimes flag a container for x-rays. This is a random process, and there's no way to prevent it, but it can sometimes cause your shipment to be delayed in customs.

How long does it take to get discharged from customs?

Getting discharged from customs can take a longtime. Since 2021, it was common to see it take 2-4weeks for orders to get discharged because the ports were so congested. Your products can't be picked up if there's a line of trucks waiting to pick up other discharged products. Some of our clients saw delays of a month or more.
